

Tennis on a table

Alan Ziegler on Stu, twenty years ago:

"after a hiatus of 5 years, has rejoined the New Jersey Table Tennis Club, where, under my weekly tutelage, he is working to bring his game back to his former expert class level of play. Stuart was the Law School ping pong champion back in 1968 but as he readily admits, neither of us back then really knew how vastly different the tournament level table tennis play is from the basement game most people are familiar with.

"Stuart is one of the senior partners of Kenyon and Kenyon, a major intellectual property firm with its main office in New York City. He is still married to Jane, whom he wed while attending the Law School. This past year he became a grandfather twice over. His son Michael, originally a lawyer, is now a booking agent with the William Morris Agency. His other son Daniel has a doctorate in electrical engineering and currently works for Qualcomm on the West Coast."
